

ABSTRACT

A method, system and computer-readable medium for achieving a target compression ratio for binary images with a minimum of image degradation.

5 Portions of the binary image are strategically replicated and used to replace adjacent portions of the image. This process is continued until a compressed version of the image data satisfies a target compression ratio.